1. What are we aiming to accomplish?
Increase the number of military organizations who see our programs.

2. What are our strategies for making this happen?
We made a 2.5 hour presentation to the prevention team at the Pentagon, recommending how they can use The Men’s Program in their new long-term sexual assault prevention strategy. We make presentations to high-level leaders in the Military (Generals, Colonels, etc.) about our program and encourage its adoption. We are a visible presence in the media and on social media, working to build public awareness about One in Four and its successful efforts to end rape.

3. What are our organization's capabilities for doing this?
We have a volunteer staff willing to travel anywhere in the world to present our programs. All of our programs and training materials are publicly available through a book, The Men's and Women's Programs: Ending Rape Through Peer Education. We have DVDs available to use in connection with our programs.

4. How will we know if we're making progress?
When we see a 40% decline in rape in a study, that shows us we are doing something right. Additional studies indicate our program’s effectiveness in encouraging bystander intervention and improving many attitudes toward rape and rape survivors.

5. What have and haven't we accomplished so far?
We have gotten our program to be used across the U.S. on college campuses and in the Military. We need to have many more colleges and military units using our programs. We also hope that high schools will take an interest in our work.
