Every year, approximately 920,000 animals in United States shelters are euthanized. This number could be significantly reduced if there were a way to transport these animals, giving them a chance to find their forever homes.

PTTR utilizes urgent flight rescue transportation as a resource to transport animals quickly and safely. This method is often the only option available for at-risk animals, as ground transportation can take over 24 hours with multiple trip segments and may not be safe for some animals.

PTTR rescues at-risk animals from under-resourced shelters and takes them to foster and adoption centers where they can be placed with loving families. PTTR fills a crucial gap in the rescue process allowing animals to be adopted and spared from euthanasia.
